On 22 August 1950 a broadcast identification announcement intercepted from the Chinese Nationalist broadcasting station, "Voice of Free China" at Taipei was monitored, which stated that the 09:00 - 09:15 GMT Russian-language broadcast was directed to Russians in China.

It has been determined from further observations that the new Russian broadcast is transmitted simultaneously on four frequencies. The stations are: BED6, 11735 kilocycles; BED7, 7152 to 7159 kilocycles; BED34, 845 kilocycles; and BED2, 670 kilocycles. Station BED34 was originally on 860 kilocycles but shifted frequency to 845 kilocycles on approximately 29 August.

The two medium-wave stations, BED2 and BED34, have not been jammed so far as can be ascertained. Observations for jamming of the short-wave transmitter BED6 are thus far inconclusive. Jamming of the short-wave transmitter BED7 continues daily.
